

LEARNING TO LEARN

New and Revised for the 21st Century

2 day workshop with Dr Stephanie Burns 15 & 16 June 2009

Learning To Learn (and its sister program Managing Information Overload) was conducted throughout Australia and New Zealand for 7 years, ending in 1994. In the fifteen years since the world has continued to accelerate along a course of increasing demand for effective strategies for managing information specifically, and for learning generally.

During these past 15 years Dr Stephanie Burns has continued to study the phenomenon of adult learning and information processing. There has been an explosion of scientific advances in the areas of adult learning and information processing. There is more demand on adults to learn quickly and effectively. It is time to make available this new work.

What you will learn:

A three to four times increase in your reading speed with full comprehension

A significantly enhanced ability to locate relevant information

The ability to discern good information and bad information

The skills to retain information and to then recall and apply that information on demand

Specific memory skills for vocabulary, foreign language, facts and general information

The means to take notes that are purposeful and useful

How to change your perception of time, and to use time more effectively
To make learning effortless, almost incidental

To determine when a course, on-line program or book is the cause of learning difficulties and what to do about it

A greater understanding of the adult brain and nervous system for learning and why it is that adults learn (can learn) so much faster and better than children

How to enhance physical coordination, balance and flexibility

To replace learning difficulties you may have experienced in the past with new, effective strategies

Improved general study strategies
Control over your brain for concentrated efforts

How to apply all these strategies to your own personal and professional learning goals

Dr Burns has revisited and revised each piece of Learning To Learn content for this new program to include our latest understanding of the brain, body and learning. Although Stephanie has chosen to retain the activities of reading, memory, note-taking and physical skill development, there are no less than 50 new distinctions being embedded in the new program.

About Dr Stephanie Burns

Dr Stephanie Burns is a world leader in the field of adult learning and deep skill development and transference.

To those who know her and her work, Stephanie Burns is something of an icon. Stephanie has taken a life path few could tread. Devoting her life to achieving a greater understanding of the learning process and what affects human motivation. Stephanie's work has not only dispelled many myths that surround these important areas, but has broken new ground in terms of the way we think about learning, motivation and teaching.

Her prime motive in all her professional efforts is a genuine interest in helping people get where it is they say they want to go.

Stephanie was born in the U.S. and has been a resident of Australia since 1987. She lives on the northern beaches of Sydney. Today Stephanie spends much of her time guiding students through uniquely crafted learning experiences online.

You can always find her hanging out with students in her virtual online office at www.stephanieburns.com.

Who should attend:

Learning To Learn is designed for anyone with significant tasks involving regular doses of new information that must be assimilated and used. It is designed for the adult who wants to maximise the effectiveness of their time devoted to study and learning, be that on the job or in private. It is for anyone who wants to understand what is possible for human learning over the lifespan.

Because LTL uses an adult level of vocabulary, we suggest that young people attending under the age of 15 be accompanied by a parent.
